

BATS EXCHANGE NAMES JEROME JOHNSON VICE PRESIDENT, MARKET DEVELOPMENT STRENGTHENS TEAM WITH HIRING OF FORMER 3D MARKETS PRESIDENT

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – April 22, 2009 – BATS Exchange, an innovative and technology leading U.S. securities exchange, named Jeromee Johnson vice president, market development, and said he will initially work with other members of the BATS team to determine whether the firm should develop an electronic derivatives trading platform.

Mr. Johnson will relocate to the Kansas City area and will report to Senior Vice President Ken Conklin, global head of business development and marketing. Mr. Conklin is based in London.

“At BATS we’re always looking to add “A-list” players and we’re excited to bring a well-established presence like Jeromee on board as we continue to look closely at other asset classes and geographies,” said Joe Ratterman, CEO of BATS Exchange and BATS Global Markets.

“Jeromee’s technical knowledge and focus on innovation are just two of the reasons why we expect him to play a significant role in our growth,” he said.

“Building on its impressive core technology and success in the US and European equities marketplaces, BATS has tremendous opportunities to make markets better in other asset classes and geographic regions. I am delighted to work with the BATS team to help them fulfill this vision,” Mr. Johnson said.

Previously, Mr. Johnson was president of 3D Markets, a nationally recognized provider of software and technology for institutional equity options trading. In that role, he was instrumental in the design and launch of Archangel, the first “dark pool” trading network in U.S. equity options.

Mr. Johnson has also served as a senior analyst and consultant with TABB Group, the influential financial markets research and advisory firm. Prior to his stint with TABB, Mr. Johnson was director of product development and professional services for UNX, the agency brokerage and provider of electronic trading tools for institutional investors.
